

Kathleen's Recent Reads—November

Fiction

A Line to Kill by Anthony Horowitz

Detective Hawthorne and his “biographer”, Horowitz, are invited to a literary festival on one of the Channel Islands in order to promote their forthcoming book. Unfortunately, the dead bodies begin to accumulate, Hawthorne is faced with an old foe, and Horowitz, as always, remains none the wiser as to the killer’s identity. This third in the series is just as funny and witty as its predecessors.

The Seven Husbands of Evelyn Hugo by Taylor Jenkins Reid

Evelyn Hugo, a legendary Hollywood star, specifically requests that unknown journalist Monique Grant be given what’s billed as an exclusive, final interview. The reason for this, and the story behind the seven husbands, is slowly revealed in a stunning, haunting story.

We Run the Tides by Vendela Vida

Friendship and betrayal among a group of teenage girls in an upscale San Francisco suburb drive this coming of age novel. Vida beautifully portrays the fraught immediacy of a thirteen-year-old’s problems, and deftly captures the details so important to an adolescent, creating a crystal clear picture of these girls and their lives.

The Inn at Tansy Falls by Cate Woods

A young English woman travels to Vermont to scatter her best friend’s ashes in a town with special associations, and while following her friend’s itinerary to get the maximum Tansy Falls “experience”, come to see its special appeal. Cozy and heartwarming.

The Vineyard at Painted Moon by Susan Mallery

Mackenzie Dienes, an orphan, got a package deal—husband, career as a winemaker, and a loving extended family—when she married her best friend’s brother right out of college. But when her marriage crumbles 10 years on, she must reinvent her life and learn how to stand on her own. Grab a glass of your favorite wine and settle in as you cheer on Mackenzie.

The Library of Lost and Found by Phaedra Patrick

When Martha Storm finds a book on her doorstep signed by her late grandmother after the date she supposedly died, she begins a journey that will literally change her life. A library, a small town, and solving troubling family dynamics with a twist of romance? Yes, please!
